Course Description and Objectives:

The goal of this class is to give you an overview of the contemporary political questions and challenges that are faced by Latin American countries. In order to have a better understanding of these issues, we start the class with a brief discussion of Latin American history and some important theoretical approaches that dominated the study of Latin American politics. The breakdowns of democracy and transitions to democratic rule have been among the leading issues, so we devote a section on these topics where both theoretical questions and examples from countries will be discussed. The following section looks in more detail at workings of democratic governments in Latin America. We will focus on political institutions such as the presidential system and political parties, populism, and some political economy issues such as economic reforms. The course will end with a discussion of “the left” and “new economic models” in Latin America.

Student Responsibilities:

(1) Required Reading and Participation.

You are expected to complete the assigned readings before class. You are also required to attend and participate in class discussions. The part of your grade based on class participation will be determined by (1) attendance, (2) three random and unannounced quizzes based on the assigned readings and (3) participation.

(2) Exams.

There will be one mid-term exam and a final (Research paper for graduate students).

The date of the mid-term: Nov. 14

The date of the final: To be announced

(3) Film Report

You need to write a short report on one of the films below.

Chile’76, Cama adentro (Live-in Maid), Roma, No, Missing (by Costa-Gavras), Argentina 1985, Even the Rain, Our Brand is Crisis (by Boynton), La historia oficial (The Official Story), O Ano em Que Meus Pais Saíram de Férias (The year when my parents went on vacation)

The report will be written in class on January 3.

(4) Group Presentation

The group needs to present a descriptive summary of their research on a topic that we will not cover in this course.

Some topic examples include social movements, gender politics, politics of crime/ drugs, constitution writing process, foreign intervention in Latin America, internal/ civil conflict.

(5) Paper (optional for undergraduate students)

(Undergraduate students may choose to write a research paper instead of the final exam.)

In this paper, you need to pick a question that is related to the contemporary politics of Latin America and conduct research that goes beyond the assigned readings. Examples include, but are not limited to, the role of courts in democratic consolidation, the representation of women in politics, the role of human rights movements in democratization, the mobilization of citizens in social movements. You are highly encouraged to talk with me about your topic/question early in the semester. The paper is due on the date of the final exam.

Your course grade will be based on the mid-term exam (30%), the final exam or paper (45%), class participation (10%), film report (5%), and presentation (10%).
