Course schedule:

Tuesday 11:40-14:30

Zoom Meeting ID: 999 0609 3688

Office Hours:

Tuesday 10:30-11:30

Course Description and Objectives:

The goal of this class is to familiarize you with the key approaches, issues and readings in the comparative politics field.

We will start the course with a discussion on the state, institutional approach to studying comparative politics and works that focus on political culture. Then, we will examine political regimes, their definitions and transitions between them. The next section will study political institutions: presidential and parliamentary systems, parties and electoral systems, and federalism. The final part of the course is on political economy where we will first discuss development with a focus on both earlier approaches such as modernization and recent works that examine the institutional framework of economic policies. We will then cover some important topics and readings from the political economy literature on “developed” countries.

The course is not organized in a way to make you read all the important and recent works in the comparative politics field, but the purpose is to give an overview of the field with the “classical” readings as well as few new and innovative studies.

Responsibilities and Grading:

There will be four components:

Participation (10%): All students are expected to contribute to the class discussion in every meeting. You need to read the assigned works carefully in order to contribute meaningfully to the class discussions. The weekly readings are kept short so that you will have no problems to keep up with them. I will be very careful to observe everyone’s participation in every meeting.

Discussion leading (%10): Two students will be assigned for each week to prepare questions about the assigned readings and lead the class discussion.

Response papers (% 40): You need to write four two page response papers. You need to choose different weeks than the ones in which you are going to lead the class discussion. The paper should briefly summarize the main questions of the readings and their arguments. (This part should be less than a page.) The remaining part of the paper should include your critique of the works and suggestions for future research.

Final exam (% 40): It will be take-home and you will be asked to answer two questions out of three that are prepared. Due date: to be announced
